

On May 27, at a meeting with the President, Moscow mayor Sergei Sobyenin announced the easing of the self-isolation regime in Moscow.

Starting June 1:

- Non-food stores, as well as consumer services businesses that do not require long-term contact with visitors (dry cleaners, laundries, repair shops, etc.) will resume work;
- In the test mode, it is planned to allow citizens to walk. Residents of the houses will walk according to the schedule in the time allotted for their home to walk;
- Moscow hospitals will begin a gradual transfer of hospitals to the provision of routine care.

Earlier, on May 27, Moscow mayor Sergei Sobyenin announced the expansion of the list of industries affected by the pandemic and eligible for state support, in particular:

- It was decided to extend the deadline for private medical clinics for paying advance payments for the first quarter of 2020 for property tax and land tax until December 31, 2020. In addition, private clinics leasing land and non-residential property owned by the city of Moscow will be exempted from rent for the period from March 1, 2020 until the end of the high-alert mode, but not earlier than July 1, 2020.
- Kiosks "Print" will be exempted from payments for the right to carry out trading activities for 3 months – from April 1 to June 30.
- The Moscow government is launching a pilot development testing program for small innovative companies. Several dozen Moscow universities, industry institutions, commercial companies and other sites are ready to provide their infrastructure for pilot testing of innovative products in real or as close as possible conditions. You can apply for participation in the pilot testing on the website <https://i.moscow/>.
