

In connection with the epidemic, the Ministry of Internal Affairs of the Russian Federation provided an opportunity for all foreign citizens who arrived in Russia to extend the validity of their visa or stay in the country (for those who did not need a visa to enter).

In order to extend the permitted period of stay in Russia, foreign citizens must apply to the territorial body of the Ministry of Internal Affairs nearest to their actual location on March 19 with an application drawn up in any form.

According to the Agency, visas will be extended regardless of the purpose of entry to the Russian Federation, including cases when the document has already expired. Similarly, they should extend the period of stay for visa-free guests and foreigners living in Russia on the basis of temporary residence permits or residence permits.

The Ministry of Internal Affairs also reported that they are resuming accepting applications for permits to attract and use foreign workers and work permits for foreigners located in Russia.
